AT THE AUDITORIUM.

Vaudeville and Metion Pictures. The appearance of the four Gardners of Taftville on the vaudeville bill at the Auditorium on Thursday made a feature that packed the house and at the first performance in the evening, the enthusiastic applause that followed their act was so long continued as to hold up the show for several minutes. The Gardners had an acrobatic and tumbling act that was a winner, the four members of the troupe doing a lot of clever shoulder work with passings, somersaults in which two members of the troupe were shot from the feet of the other two who lay upon their backs upon the stage. At the evening performance they were given a big bouquet from some of their admirers. The Four Gardners comprise George, Alfred Almore and Wilbert; the last named being but 16 and one of the cleverest members of the quartette. They made their initial appearance in public together on Thursday and expect to secure bookings in vaudeville. The appearance of the four Gardners

The two other acts on the bill were both musical, and were both well received, especially the novelty called the One Man Quartette, who combines yodeling and remarkable voice changes in his act. The Mascagni Trio gave a musical and sing-song novelty with guitars and mandelins that was likewise a pleasing number on the bill.
